Those Dreadful Sores

Tisey Continued to Spread in Spite of Treatment but Now They are Healed - A Wonderful Work.

"For many years I have been a great sufferer with variouse veins on one of my limbs. My foot and limb became dreadfully ewollen. When I stood up I could feel the blood rushing down the voius of this limb. One day ; accidentally hit my foot against some object and a sore broke out which continued to spread and was exceedingly painful. I concluded I needed a blood purifier and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time those dreadful sores which had caused me so much suffering, began to heal. kept on faithfully with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and in a short time my limb was completely healed and the sores gave me no more pain. I cannot be too thankful for the wonderful work Hood's Sarsaparilla, has done for me." Mrs. A. H GILSON, Hartland, Vermont

GOOD ADVICE FOR FARMERS

/ Cotton Planter Talks of the Inde pendence of the Southern Farmer.

One of the most extensive planter and merchants in the upper tier of counties was in the city yesterday and talked with a reporter for the the South in general. His views as to the commercial future of the South was hopeful in the extreme, and he advanced a number of excellent arguments to sustain them, but of exceptional interest were his expressions in regard to the future of cotton and the prospect of a return to the high prices for which the cottontot has never ceased to hope.

"I am sorry in the bottom of my heart for the Southerner who remains blind to the fact that we have seen the last era of good prices for cotton," he said. "Such a thing has forever passed away, and the dreamer who is simple enough to hope for its return chases a rainbow, the end of which is bankruptcy. We are charmed with the suggestions made every year to reduce the output of cotton by a combination on the part of the planters who will bind themselves to plant less, but the man who of "MOTHER"-she who watched seriously hopes for any material reduction in acreage from such movements as this has an amount of confidence in human nature that fort should be made to avoid it. would put a little child to shame. In the first place, it would be well nigh impossible to get the four or five hundred thousand farmers in the South into any such combination, and in the second it would be utterly impossible to get dread, suffering or gloomy forethem to stick if they were. We count therefore on the production keeping ahead of the demand, which of course means low prices. It really is found stronger after than before pains me to make these admissions, confinement-in short, it "makes for I am a cotton grower and have Childbirth natural and easy," as been one all of my life and attach so many have said. Don't be a sort of sentimental regard to the persuaded to use anything but industry as one of the survivals of ante-bellum times. But I think it best for us to own up like men and meet the situation as we find it.

"But I do not think we should see in this an altogether unmixed blessing, for there may be undiscovered features to offset this. With our great and growing milling industries we cannot think of abandoning the cultivation of cotton, for upon that, more than anything else, depends the upbuilding of the South. We must prepare, therefore, to reduce the cultivation of the staple to such a science that we can produce it cheaper than any other part of the world, and control the world's supply. High prices would be welcome, primary elections, addresses the followbut they would encourage the industry in other countries and build up competition. What we want, with our experience in the cultivation of our experience in the cultivation of the plant, is to monopolize it and large vote given me on the 30th of August and 13th of September. From the botbring mills enough here to manufacture all we grow, so that our profits can come from that source. The world must have cotton goods; more and more of it is needed every day, and we must try to supply it and retain the profits of the manufacture. That will more than repay the South for the difference between cheap and dear cotton.

"But to look, at the matter from the cotton growers' standpoint, one would think that he had very little to hope for from such an arrangement. He could not be expected to share the profits of the manufacturer, and if he is to continue to receive low prices for his cotton it does look like I am proposing that he is to be the lamb of the clark by the clark the lamb of the altar. But his hope is to be found in an effort to make the farm self-supporting. Since the war the South has been buying something like $100,000,000 worth of corn and meat and flour from the Northwestern farmers. That has been a big thing for the merchant, broker and factor who advanced to him, but experience has shown him how suicidal it was for him. With how suicidal it was for him. With the exception of sugar and coffee there is practically nothing that the Southern farmer uses that he cannot raise at home, and when the day comes that he can say at the beginning of the year, 'I have my year's supplies out there in the smeke house and erib,' the question will be solved in the accusations of their own consciand cotton will be a surplus crop. I have heard it said that it was cheaper to raise the cotton to buy the corn, but some time ago a planter showed but some time ago a planter showed me a field of growing corn from Laurens, September 16, 1898.

which he said he had gathered an acre last year. After measuring it he had made a careful estimate of what that corn had cost him, counting taxes, interest on the value of the land, labor, seed, fertilizers, farm implements, etc., and had found that it came to a little less than ten cents a bushel. I would like to see a farmer who can buy corn at ten cents a bushel.

"There is no doubt about the farmer being able to make cotton a surplus crop, but, of course, the merohant will not endorse this view at avorage of twenty-two bushels an

It is true we had many difficulties to contend with. The influence of the State Administration, the influence of the State chant will not endorse this view at first. The short-sighted merchant fails to see that his prosperity depends upon the ultimate prosperity of the country, and prefers making his profits out of supplies sold at lier prices to-day to the surer and more lasting prosperity that will come with an independent, self-sustaining farming community. I know merchants who will make no advances if ninetenths of the acreage to be planted is not to be in cotton. What is the use of the small farmer pledging to cut down the cotton acreage when his merchant gives him to underpends upon the ultimate prosperity his merchant gives him to understand that he must go without bread and meat if he persists in planting, say, only ten acres of cotton to the horse? That man must go to work News and Courier about the business outlook in his part of the State, and grees, and place himself in a position but to the state, and grees, and place himself in a position beartened, others on account of favors on account of favors. where he can say to the merchant: from the State Administration, militar I have my year's supplies, and for appointments, location of camps, etc. they received less than three thousand what few other things I will need I majority, showing that if the Democrats of the State had been left free to vote as they pleased Featherstone, the champion bales of cetton. independent and in position to support the mills, and we can then snap our fingers at the rest of the world and tell it that we can raise cotton cheaper than anybody and manufacture it at home. That day is not far distant either, and when it comes people will wonder why they fooled away valuable time at cotton growers' conventions.
